

As the owner of a small wireless ISP, I find the idea of being forced to subsidize my competitors completely reprehensible. It is unreasonable and just plain wrong. With the recent availability of consumer voice over ip services, it is completely unnecessary and uneconomical to ensure standard phone service. It would be much more beneficial to levy fees against traditional services that have been granted government funds in the past, to pay back their debt and help provide availability for newer, better, cheaper services to the public.

Aaron Voisine
CEO
Heat Speed Wireless Inc.